DESCRIPTION

ELECTRONIC APPLIANCE

5

Technical Field

The present invention relates to an electronic appliance which receives a message from a base station.

Background Art

10

In recent years, so-called pagers have appeared on the market as an electronic appliance capable of receiving information from a base station and displaying the received information.

15

If a parent makes his or her child carry a pager, he or she can easily send a message to the child with reliability at a low cost as occasion arises when the child is out. For this reason, pagers have come into widespread use.

20

Conventional pagers, however, are only capable of receiving information transmitted from a base station and displaying the received information, and have the problem in that children lose interest in them as they grow.

Also, there is a demand for a more interesting electronic appliance for children in early childhood.
